The Build Your Own Android App Day Camp is a one-day program designed to introduce middle school girls to the fun of mobile application development for Android phones. The camp will take place on the campus of SIU Carbondale. The curriculum for the camp includes about 5 hours of face-to-face instruction in Android mobile application development using the MIT’s App Inventor.

Program Overview

The Build Your Own Android App Day Camp is a one-day program designed to introduce middle school girls to the fun of mobile application development for Android phones. The camp will take place on the campus of SIU Carbondale. The curriculum for the camp includes about 5 hours of face-to-face instruction in Android mobile application development using the MIT’s App Inventor.

Course Description

Students will be introduced to concepts for developing applications that run on the Android platform. Students will gain hands-on experience creating and deploying mobile applications with App Inventor, an open source visual development tool.

The course will explore features such as networking, web services, location services, phone sensors, media, speech recognition, and animation.

Students will gain a taste of college education as some of the topics covered in the camp are taught as part of the Information Systems and Technologies curriculum. However, the course is tailored to the age and experience of the camp participants.

Learn / Understand

- Create mobile applications for Android phones
- Build layouts and interfaces to interact with users
- Store information on the phone and on the web
- Use the phone sensors such as the location, accelerometer and orientation sensors
- Interact with Google Maps

Advance Registration Required

A $20 deposit is required. Deposits and registration forms for selected campers should be received by February 15, 2016. The deposit is refundable upon completion of the camp. Applicants not meeting the payment deadline will forfeit the camp slot. Additional information will be mailed to campers along with the registration confirmation.

The University reserves the right to cancel any program. In the event of cancellation, only those pre-registered will be notified.

Conduct Policy

The student and parent will be required to sign a Conduct Policy prior to attending the camp. Paperwork will be forwarded with a registration confirmation letter.

Our recommendation is that all concerned review the policy together before signing, then return it to Conference and Scheduling.
